AVERAGE TEMPERATURES AND WHAT TO PACK

In June, Nova Scotia experiences mild to warm temperatures, with average highs ranging from 15°C to 20°C (59°F to 68°F) and lows around 8°C to 12°C (46°F to 54°F). However, the weather can be quite variable, so it's a good idea to be prepared for both cool and warmer conditions.

For packing, tourists should consider the following:

Layers: Bring a mix of layers to accommodate temperature fluctuations. A light sweater or fleece, along with a t-shirt or short-sleeve shirt, can help you stay comfortable.

Waterproof Jacket: Nova Scotia can experience occasional rain showers, so a waterproof jacket or a rain poncho is useful.

Comfortable Shoes: If you plan to explore and do a lot of walking, comfortable and waterproof footwear is recommended.

Sun Protection: Sunglasses, sunscreen, and a hat will help protect you from the sun, especially if you're out on the water or hiking.

Warm Layer: A light insulated jacket or a warm layer might be needed, especially in the evenings or if you're visiting coastal areas, where it can be cooler.

Outdoor Gear: If you're planning to hike or explore outdoor areas, consider packing a small backpack, water bottle, and perhaps a picnic blanket.

Flexibility in your clothing choices will ensure that you stay comfortable regardless of the weather!
